

Write Your Own Adventure Introduction Passage

It's a Saturday afternoon, and you're out for a walk. Your little sister was being way too annoying to stay in all day. Now though, as the sun beats down and sweat drips off your cheek, you wonder if you should have stayed home.

Only a few more steps until the library, you think to yourself, remembering the powerful air conditioning inside. You climb the front steps and pull open the door. WHOOOSH. The cool air seems to pull you in.

"Hello?" you call. The comforting hum of the air conditioner is the only response. That's weird, you think, and wander in alone.

Two books sit on a nearby desk, and you feel a strange pull towards them. Neither has a title – only a large hyper realistic illustration. The first book cover pictures a swirling galaxy: waves of dark purple blending with bright pinpricks of iridescent blue stars. The second pictures a lush, wild jungle: you've never seen so many different shades of green in one place.

You choose one and flip open the cover. A light puff of dust rises to meet your nose, and you notice there are no words in this book. Strange. The air feels thick. Your eyelids start to drop and you need to put your head down. As you feel your cheek land on the blank page of the open book, you wonder – is that dust? Or is it glitter? Everything goes black.
